Alamo puts on the works

Vendors were arranged in a tented maze.

At the end of the maze were more vendor spaces, food and door prizes.

A lengthy vendor maze with 80 exhibitors from all over the United States, was the highlight of the Alamo Iron Works Trade Show and Open House May 18, which attracted nearly 1,500 to the SBC Center Parkway location.

"It was designed so you work your way by each one of the vendors, so you get to see everybody that's here," said Zane Grubbs, Alamo Iron Works metro sales representative. "By the time you get to the food you're pretty hungry."

Most of the vendor spaces were arranged under a continuous tent. Along with the trade show, tours were conducted through the facility which houses three separate divisions - supply steel service center, fabrication and rebar operation.

"Overall, we have been doing this for about 12 years. The annual trade show gives us a really good opportunity to exhibit new products and meet and greet a lot of our customers," said Tom Cameron, regional sales manager for Alamo.

"We are very excited for the second year in a row to have a very good turnout, and we look forward to continuing these events in the future," concluded Barry Lazzeroni, chief operating officer for the supply division of Alamo Iron Works. -kf

Dale Schroeder, Jancy Engineering, offered product demonstrations.
